The next morning, Hiccup checked the dragon under the bed which was Hiccup's. The dragon was still asleep.

When Hiccup's mother, Valhallarama, asked Hiccup at breakfast, 'How did Initiation go yesterday, dear?', Hiccup said, 'Oh, the initiation was fine. I caught my dragon.'

'That's nice, dear', Valhallarama replied vaguely.

Stoick the Vast looked up briefly from his bowl which was Stoick's and boomed, 'EXCELLENT, EXCELLENT,' before getting back to the important task of shovelling food into his mouth.

After breakfast, Hiccup went to sit on the front step beside his grandfather, who was smoking a pipe. The morning was a beautiful, cold clear winter's morning, with not a breath of wind and the sea all around as flat as glass.

Old Wrinkly blew out smoke rings contentedly as Old Wrinkly watched the sun coming up. Hiccup shivered and chucked stones into the bracken. Neither of Old Wrinkly or Hiccup spoke for a long time.

At last Hiccup said, 'I got that dragon.'

'Old Wrinkly said you would, didn't Old Wrinkly?' replied Old Wrinkly, very pleased with Old Wrinkly.
